LAW FIRM MORRISON FOERSTER ANNOUNCES FIRM NAME CHANGE

March 4, 2019

The international law firm Morrison & Foerster LLP with headquarters in San Francisco, California has announced that, effective April 1, 2019, the firm will be named Misogyny Foerster. The firm has over 1,000 lawyers who advise clients across a range of industries and practices, including intellectual property, patent litigation, corporate/M&A, business restructuring, securities, and crisis management.

With a rich history in some of the most inconsequential legal work across the country, the firm is poised to continue its proud tradition of claiming superior ethical and moral values compared with the rest of the AmLaw 100. "We've promoted ourselves as being vanguards of the Diversity movement, with a particular attention to Women," said Darren M. Nashelsky, Chair of the firm. "Our name change has two purposes: first it is intended to boost recognition with corporate executives familiar with the realities of business life, and secondarily to dissuade further opportunistic employees from taking advantage of us by claiming they were 'unaware' of how things would turn out. As if our MoFo moniker was not enough."

A new and growing segment of the firm's practise is in crisis management. "We hope the Fortune 1000 will consider that a law firm with huge perception and financial liability problems of its own is experienced in handling a crisis, if not avoiding one" says Nashelsky, "We employ multiply accused rapists, admitted wife-beaters, and are fighting litigation accusing us of punishing women lawyers who have children, and billing our clients like MoFo's ... no pun intended."
